

Soil Scientists Are Engaged In Studying Conditions In Canada

Record Regina.—Representing 30 different countries and 25 different languages 199 soil experts from all over the world visited Regina and held a visit

Prof. Joel estimated that the Russian delegates seemed to be the most interested in the soil of Saskatchewan because it was very similar to that of their own country. "All the visitors were impressed by the excellent development of the country."

In speaking of the work of the Association of Soil Reclaimers, Dr. Shriener who is one of the guides on the tour, said that the main object is to bring about a general classification of soils.

"Hitherto," said Dr. Shriener, "there has not been the necessary classification of soils, of which there are some 600 kinds, and our object is to have these so classified that each nation in the world will know what the other is talking about.

"On this tour, which is a complimentary one tendered to the visiting delegates to the convention, we have inspected all the different belts of soil in the U.S.A. from the cotton belts to the arid deserts, and we are now inspecting the grain belts of Western Canada."

"At each spot we touch a trench about six feet deep is dug and we are therefore able to judge the quality of the sub-soil in that particular area."
